On Friday, July 23, President Donald Trump signed four executive orders aimed at lowering prescription drug costs. The executive orders included expanded support for the safe, legal importation of prescription drugs from Canada and other countries where the price for identical drugs is lower.

"Americans’ need for affordable prescription drugs has never been greater then it is right now amid the Coronavirus pandemic. President Trump’s executive order rightly opens the door for Americans’ to access safe prescription drugs through accredited Canadian pharmacies. These pharmacies provide medicines at a fraction of the price that consumers pay for the same medicines in the U.S.,” said Jack Pfeiffer, executive director of the Campaign for Personal Prescription Importation.

"While federal legislation has been evasive, for years millions of Americans have turned to personal prescription importation from licensed Canadian pharmacies as prices in the U.S. soared.”

How Americans can save on prescription costs

By BRANDPOINT

JULY 17, 2020:02 PM
(BPT) - Did you know that prescriptions cost more in the U.S. than anywhere else in the world? If you or a loved one need daily medications, you may already know about the high cost of prescription drugs.

Access to affordable prescription drugs is an even more vital concern due to the COVID-19 pandemic. Anyone with pre-existing conditions and who has experienced financial setbacks or lost their employment may be anxious about their health and struggling to afford healthcare and medication costs.

“Americans struggle now more than ever with skyrocketing prescription drug prices and, despite promises from elected officials to lower medication costs, meaningful change remains elusive,” said Jack Pfeiffer, executive director of the Campaign for Personal Prescription Importation (CPPI).

Because this issue is unresolved, Americans are increasingly turning to Canadian pharmacies, from which they can safely order medications online.

This year's annual survey conducted by CPPI explored why this choice is becoming more popular, how much Americans are saving, and who is benefiting most from this option.

How the cost of medications influences where people get their prescriptions

The majority of the CPPI survey respondents (94%) cited the high cost of prescriptions as the primary reason they order medications from online pharmacies in Canada.

Other reasons for importing medications included the consistency in pricing (11%); the convenience of online ordering (7%) and consistency in availability of medications (6%), plus the lack of availability of some medications in the U.S. (4%).

How much are people actually saving?

The CPPI survey looked at actual dollar amounts people reported from ordering their prescriptions from Canadian pharmacies. On average, those who ordered pharmaceuticals online from Canada saved $245 per month.
This amount is a sharp increase from the $196 average monthly savings reported in last year’s survey.

Breaking the totals down further, among those who saved over $300 per month (20% of the respondents), the average savings added up to $648.

Over half of the respondents (53%) reported saving up to $199 each month, and 18% said they saved between $200 and $29 through personal importation of their prescriptions from Canada.

About the Campaign for Personal Prescription Importation

The Campaign for Personal Prescription Importation (CPPI) is a national nonprofit patient advocacy organization that fights for Americans’ access to safe, affordable prescription medications from Canada for personal use. Tens of millions of Americans – especially the elderly and others on fixed incomes – struggle to pay the extremely high price of prescription medications in the U.S. We are here to be their voice.

Millions of Americans use licensed Canadian pharmacies annually, to purchase their daily prescription medications at an affordable price. We believe that all Americans have a right to affordable medications. It is time to change the current U.S. policy on this issue to provide immediate access to life-saving medications, taken daily for chronic health conditions, at affordable prices.
